About Alley Cat Allies ......................................................................................... 63

About the Author ..................................................................................................... 63
Introduction

In all 50 states and the District of Columbia, local and state government agencies must fulfill requests by citizens for government records. The Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) refers to the law that compels the federal government to disclose information. However, every state has its own version of FOIA, often called “sunshine” or “public records” laws.

Public shelters and pounds must respond to information requests filed under the state public records law. Ideally, all shelters (regardless of their legal obligation) would post their intake and euthanasia rates on their websites and quickly respond to all reasonable requests for information. But for whatever reasons, sometimes it is difficult for citizens to obtain information from shelters.

This is a guide for activists and concerned citizens who want to obtain information about the animal shelters in their local community. Included are 51 sample letters requesting basic shelter data for every state and the District of Columbia with the corresponding state public records law.

The most common information that animal advocates want are intake and disposition rates so the sample letters include this. For example, the intake and disposition statistics of Virginia shelters are already available online at www.vdacs.virginia.gov/animals/welfare.shtml, so you do not need to submit requests to individual shelters if you live in Virginia.

Alley Cat Allies’ Shelter Transparency Campaign

Alley Cat Allies is working to establish and increase shelter transparency through policy papers, public education, and grassroots advocacy. Meaningful and accessible shelter data allows taxpayers and donors to hold pounds and animal shelters accountable and enables decision makers to make informed choices. For this reason we support mandatory recordkeeping for all shelters. Our ultimate objective is to leverage shelter transparency to end the killing of cats in every pound and animal shelter in the United States.
Public vs. Private Shelters
It can be difficult to determine whether a shelter is public or private. Remember, only public shelters fall under public records laws. It’s usually clear if a shelter is run solely by the government. The name likely includes the name of the community followed by “animal shelter” or “animal control.” However, some shelters that appear to be private are also partially funded by government dollars and hold the government contract for animal sheltering. For example, the Humane Society of Washington County in Hagerstown, Md. holds the contract for Washington County. Even though a shelter is incorporated as a nonprofit, it still might be considered a governmental body for the purposes of a public information request.

Some nonprofit shelters funded by a local government have refused to respond to public information requests arguing that they are not subject to these laws. The law varies from state to state, but there is a strong argument to be made that these shelters should be subject to requests. There was even a court case in Washington State that found in favor of transparency. In Clarke, a woman requested euthanasia logs from the Tri-Cities Animal Care & Control Shelter (TCAC). TCAC is a private business that contracted with the three cities, Richland, Pasco, and Kennewick, to deliver animal sheltering services. TCAC denied her request arguing that it was not a public agency. The Washington courts determined that TCAC was required to provide the records because it performed a public function and received the majority of its funding for the government.

To Whom Should the Requests be Sent?
If the shelter is run exclusively by your city or county, an Internet search might reveal which city agency or employee is charged with responding to public information requests. For example, a big city like Chicago, Ill. has a specific person who routinely receives public information requests. If it’s not apparent, simply send the request to the shelter director by mail or email. If you are sending an email, include the emails of any administrative support staff that you think might be able to help. The administrative staff is often the front line for requests from the public. You could also call or visit the shelter in person to ask who the requests should be sent to.

Fees
Requesters sometimes have to pay for copying costs or, more rarely, the staff time used to find the records. Oftentimes, records are given at no charge, especially if the records can be sent electronically. You could also view the records in person to avoid copying costs, but in most cases, you will want a permanent copy of the records.

Troubleshooting

What if I Don’t Hear Back?
If you don’t receive a response from an email, deliver the request in person or mail it with return receipt requested. Keep the return receipt in case you later need to prove that the shelter received your request but ignored it. If you still don’t hear back, send the original letter to the city or county attorney’s office and indicate that the shelter has not responded in a timely fashion.

Additionally, do an Internet search for your state and “public records.” Most states have online guides about submitting public records requests written by the State Attorney General's Office or another agency. You will likely find more detailed information specific to your state or perhaps even an explanation of what to do if your request is improperly denied.

Explanation of Common Terms
Understanding shelter records can be difficult. Sometimes shelters use obscure acronyms or terms of art to describe an animal’s intake or disposition. The following is a list of commonly used terms.

- ACO: Animal control officer
- A/L: At large
- DAS/Died: Died at shelter, usually refers to when an animal dies in the shelter’s care
- DOA: Dead on arrival, the animal arrives at the shelter deceased
- Owner req. euth/Owner req. PTS/RPTS: The owner asks the shelter to euthanize their pet
- PTS: Put to sleep or euthanized
- Q: Quarantine
- RTO: Return to owner
- Reclaim: The owner reclaims the animal (similar or identical to RTO)
- Seizure: An animal is “seized” or taken from a situation often because of cruelty allegations
- Transfer: The animal is moved to a rescue group or moved between two shelters
These sample letters request intake and disposition statistics. Change the body of the letter if you are interested in other information. We recommend using simple, clear language in drafting the request. Use bullet points so it’s obvious what records and how many records you are requesting.

Here is suggested language for frequently requested records:

Intake and Disposition:

1. For 2014, the total intake of cats and the disposition of cats impounded at ____ (shelter), broken down by month (the number returned to owner, adopted, died, euthanized, or transferred to a rescue group or another facility).

2. For 2014, the total intake of dogs and the disposition of dogs impounded at ___ (shelter), broken down by month (the number returned to owner, adopted, died, euthanized, or transferred to a rescue group or another facility)

General policies:

1. Any and all written policies of _______ (name of shelter/police department) for the operation of ________ (name of shelter, animal control facility) for 2013 to the present date.

Community cat policies:

1. Any and all documents stating the policy of ________ (name of shelter/police department) regarding community, free-roaming, or feral cats.

2. Any and all documents stating the protocol or test, if any, used by ________ (name of shelter/police department) for determining whether a cat is feral and/or dangerous.

Records regarding a specific animal:

1. Any and all records relating to ______ (name of animal, physical description of animal, ID number, estimated date of impoundment)
   a. Please include descriptions of any medical treatment that the animal received.
Using Records to Help Shelter Animals

What to Do with It
Shelter statistics are a powerful tool for advocates because they move the conversation away from accusations and emotion and ground it in facts. Data can help you change local laws to protect animals. Maybe your research will reveal that many community cats are killed year after year. You’ll have a more powerful argument when you ask your city council to consider supporting Trap-Neuter-Return if you can show that the endless cycle of trap and kill is ineffective.

You can also push back against a shelter’s claims if you believe they are being untruthful. Perhaps the shelter is advertising itself as “no-kill” when it actually euthanizes community cats. Finally, examining a shelter’s intake and disposition statistics can help you become a more focused, effective advocate. Pinpoint the type of animal most likely to die in the shelter (kittens, adult pit bulls, etc.). Armed with this information, you can offer the type of assistance that the shelter most desperately needs.

The citation of your state's public records laws (please see Appendix for state by state specifics)

This is where you list the actual information that you are requesting. In the sample letter, we request the intake and disposition data for cats and dogs in 2014.

This lets the agency know that you are fine with receiving the records electronically (which might save you money on postage).

If the agency denies your request, they must explain their decision in writing.

Some state laws note that agencies must respond within a certain amount of time, for example, five days. This is a way to signal to the agency that you know the law and that they are violating it if they don’t get back to you quickly.

If the law does not state a specific time nor is there any relevant case law, we did not include this sentence in the sample letter.

Provide as much contact information (phone, address, email) as you feel comfortable so that the agency can reach you!

Note about Virginia: Virginia has one of the strongest animal shelter recordkeeping and reporting laws in the United States. State law requires that all animal pounds, shelters, and rescue groups keep records about the intake and disposition of animals in their care. The Virginia Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services publishes this information online each year.

If you are interested in the statistics of a particular shelter, visit http://arr.va-vdacs.com/cgi-bin/Vdacs_search.cgi. This website allows you to search by single organization, all rescue agencies, all humane societies, all city facilities, all county facilities, and all/statewide (rescue agencies, city facilities, county facilities). For example, if you click on Bedford County Animal Control and Pound Facility, you can see the organization’s contact information (including address, email, and phone) along with the 2014 intake and disposition numbers for cats, dogs, equine, hybrid canines, livestock, other companion animals, and poultry. In 2014, the Bedford County Animal Control and Pound Facility received 1,103 cats. Of those cats, 19 were reclaimed by owner, 81 were adopted, 430 were transferred to another Virginia releasing agency, 0 were transferred by an approved out-of-state facility, 46 died in the facility, and 508 were euthanized.

If the online data does not include the information that you are looking for, please use the draft letter customized for Virginia shelters on the next page.

About Alley Cat Allies

Alley Cat Allies is the innovator in the protection and humane treatment of cats. As the only national advocacy organization dedicated exclusively to cats, Alley Cat Allies has worked for 25 years to support caregivers, change laws, improve shelters, and most importantly—save cats. Since our founding in 1990, we have popularized Trap-Neuter-Return (TNR) as the only humane and effective approach to community cats. By establishing and promoting standards of care, our organization has brought humane treatment of cats into the national spotlight. Before Alley Cat Allies, TNR was virtually unknown in America, and no local governments supported it. Today, a growing list of more than 500 municipalities officially embrace TNR.
